"Greg has served his local community, the state of Nevada and our country with the highest level of integrity and honor, and we wish him our absolute best as he returns to our nation's capital to serve in this key post with the FBI," said Matt Feeney, chairman of Snell & Wilmer. "We are proud to call Greg our partner and our friend, and we thank him for his many contributions to the firm. He will be deeply missed."

Brower joined the firm in 2009 after approximately two years as the U.S. Attorney for the District of Nevada. As Nevada's chief federal law enforcement officer, he supervised all federal criminal prosecutions and all civil litigation involving the United States in Nevada. During his tenure he personally handled several matters both at trial and in the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals.

Before his appointment as U.S. Attorney, Brower served in a variety of other senior government posts in Washington, D.C. From 2006 to 2007 he was Chief Legal Officer at the U.S. Government Printing Office (GPO), overseeing the agency's Office of General Counsel. From 2004 to 2006, he served as GPO's Inspector General, supervising all internal audits and investigations.
